As the global geriatric population continues to grow, an increasing proportion of people reporting to emergency departments are elderly. The work-up of these patients uses more time and resources than that of younger patients, and is complicated by the fact that acute disease often presents more subtly, without the outward manifestations typically seen in younger patients.

Geriatric Emergency Medicine- Principles & Practice

Geriatric Emergency Medicine: Principles and Practice was written with the goal of improving the care of elderly patients in academic and community emergency departments (EDs). Its publication is timely—the first “baby boomers” have approached Medicare age, and the growing health care needs of older patients have prompted the creation of EDs designed with their special needs in mind.

Geriatric Emergency Medicine edited by Joseph H. Kahn

Teaching is based on the principles of 'Case Method in Practice' (Christensen Center for Teaching & Learning, Harvard Business School). This is described as a method that equips practitioners in managing uncertainty and (we believe) complements the principles of managing older people with non-specific multimorbidities presenting to complex care settings, such as the Emergency Department.
