The model that I use is based on the work of David Merrill and Roger Reid (published in 1981 as Personal Styles and Effective Performance); they use the term 'Social Styles'. This is an 'inter-personal' model. The four behavioural styles within this model (Analytical, Amiable, Expressive, Driver) closely reflect the Four Temperaments of Hippocrates. Using the 'People Styles' model. Each behavioural style within the model has a set of characteristics.

Low responsiveness. A person with lower responsiveness is less likely to be empathetic as there is less emotional content in their reactions. Their response has a higher cognitive element and so they think more before responding, which can make responses slower. In the social styles grid, low responsiveness typically has the label 'Controls'.
